From the Eyes of a Student:

Giving a Gift By Cara Colosky

Many people say that giving is far better than receiving. Giving a gift is normally much more memorable than receiving something yourself. Making someone else happy and seeing some one's reaction to your gift always makes one feel good inside. My friend Maddie McHugh was having her 16th birthday party, and my friend Carolyn and I wanted to get her something special. We decided to make her a video including pictures and videos of all three of us throughout the years. We put some of our favorite songs that we always sing on the video, also. Carolyn helped me find pictures and videos of the three of us and I made the video. Even if my computer had been working faster, it would have taken quite a while to make, but my computer kept freezing up. And when it was not freezing up, the sound would stop working and I had to reboot the computer to get it working again. But after all this, I finally got it done. We were so excited to give it to her, but we had to wait until we could all get together. Finally we set up a day that would work for both of us to go to Maddie's house. When we handed the present to her, she unwrapped it with her eyes closed and pulled it out. When she looked at it she paused for a minute and said, "Aw, you guys made me a video." Then she got her laptop and put the CD in., and she was really excited to watch it. While watching the video, she kept saying that she loved it and that we are such good friends. It started to make her tear up when she remembered all the good memories we have had together. After we had watched it once, she said she wanted to watch it again. Throughout the day that we spent together, we watched it probably five more times. I was so glad Maddie liked the video, and I felt so blessed to have a friend like her.
